What is an Advisory Planning Commission?

An Advisory Planning Commission (APC) is an independent body comprised of residents appointed by the Regional District Board. Members of an APC serve on a volunteer basis, attending meetings monthly or as scheduled based on need and volume of referrals from the Board. APCs are advisory in nature, and they do not have any direct approval, ownership, or authority over matters that are referred to them.

Members of an APC have a significant responsibility to the community they are appointed to represent. The primary functions of an APC are as follows:

- Advising the Board, when requested, on matters respecting land use and community planning, such as:
 - Preparation of Zoning Bylaws and Official Community Plans
 - Preparation of infrastructure plans and studies that have planning implications (e.g., sewer, water, transportation)
 - Applications from property owners for land use approvals, such as rezoning applications, temporary use permits, and development variance permits
- Listening to and gathering input from the community to ascertain views on planning and land use matters
